Pre-Reading Activities

Mystery Prior Knowledge

What makes a good mystery? Have students work together to create a class web of their previous experiences with mystery. Make a web of all words students brainstorm regarding the topic. Further guidance can include popular writers of the genre, synonyms, common characteristics/parts/components to mystery, setting/mood/tone, etc.

Predictions about Characters

Use the graphic organizer Predicting Character Traits. Listing only the character names, have students make predictions about the characters and personality traits. Return to prediction chart after Chapter 5, or another close chapter near the beginning, to verify predictions.

Truth and Lies

There are lots of reasons for lying. Make a list of some different reasons people lie to one another. Does everyone lie? What kind of lie is worse than another? Is lying ever okay? Create a situation when lying to someone would be acceptable.

Book At a Glance

After glancing at only the book cover and title, have students make a prediction about the storyline. Even though they already know the genre is mystery/suspense, what tone or mood will the story have? Serious? Funny? Predictable? How will the chess pieces fit into the mystery? The fireworks and American flag? Revisit the predictions after the story to see if anyone was close.

Background Information: Ellen Raskin

Have students research the author of The Westing Game, Ellen Raskin, noting any other books she has written and personal life information. Students can present information in a variety of ways, including brochures, posters, verbal presentations, or in paragraph form. Based on her background and other novels written, what kind of story will The Westing Game be?

Background Information: The Newberry Medal

The Westing Game was awarded several prizes: the Newberry Medal, the Boston Globe/Horn Book Award, and an ALA Notable Book award. Students can research these various awards noting other books that have received this distinction. What predictions can be made from these awards?

CHAPTER 1: Sunset Towers

Chapter Summary

The story begins with a description of a building, Sunset Towers. On the Fourth of July, delivery boy Barney Northrup delivers letters to the six random people whom “someone” has chosen to live in this luxurious new building. The first appointment is with Jake and Grace Wexler in which the deliveryman persuades Grace but gives Jake an uneasy feeling. Another chosen tenant is not quite as impressed—Sydelle Pulaski. The apartment she is shown isn’t as stellar as the Wexler’s, but Barney convinces her as well. By the end of the day, Barney has convinced all six families to move in to the Sunset Towers, already having their names printed on the mailboxes. However, Barney had rented one apartment to the wrong person.

CHAPTER 2: Ghosts or Worse

Chapter Summary

The new tenants move in. Shin Hoo's Restaurant has their big opening on the fifth floor, but it's a flop—only three people come. In contrast, the Theodorakis Coffee Shop in the lobby enjoys brisk business from tenants and workers from nearby Westingtown. The afternoon of Halloween, four people are standing outside the Sunset Towers driveway: the doorman Sandy McSouthers, high-school seniors Theo Theodorakis and Doug Hoo, and delivery boy Otis Amber. Junior-high student Turtle Wexler bicycles up to them with news of smoke coming out of the Westing House chimney. Otis assures everyone that old man Westing is most likely dead. Sandy thinks this is fair, as the cheerful doorman is still bitter about losing his job at the Westing paper mill twenty years earlier.

Sandy and Odis spin the tale of the two “unfortunate fellows” from Westingtown who visited the house exactly a year ago. They mention the story of a one-dollar bet that the two boys couldn't stay in the house for five minutes. They barely got inside when they were chased out by a ghost - or worse. One fell over the cliff; the other emerged with bloody hands and has only repeated two words since then: “Purple waves.” Turtle responds that for two dollars per minute, she'll go to that house. From the front window of 2D, Chris Theodorakis watches his brother and the others accept Turtle's bet. When Theo gets home he will tell him about what he saw in his binoculars—the person with a limp that he saw enter the Westing House. Chris is confined to a wheelchair and prone to violent spasms but likes to watch birds.

CHAPTER 3: Tenants In and Out

Chapter Summary

In her family's apartment, Angela Wexler is being fitted for her wedding dress by Flora Baumbach, the dressmaker who lives on the second floor. Grace, Angela's mother, watches on. Angela tells her mother she saw smoke coming from the Westing House, news that Turtle also brings. In Doctor Wexler's office, Mrs. Crow also sees the smoke from the Westing House as Jake Wexler is cutting out a corn on her foot. At Hoo's restaurant, Mr. Hoo is skeptical of the story Doug tells of Westing's corpse rotting on some kind of Oriental rug. Hoo thinks that if Westing is home again, he won't get off so easy this time.

Sandy McSouthers salutes Judge J.J. Ford as she drives up in her Mercedes and points out the smoke from the Westing House. She considers how to gather money if Sam Westing has indeed returned. Chris Theodorakis tries to tell Theo about the limping man but his stuttering overwhelms him. Instead, Theo tells a scary story of Westing dead and rotting on the Oriental rug, much to Chris' delight. Even though she is limping now, Sydelle Pulaski is never noticed by anyone. The only person who pays attention to her is crippled Chris Theodorakis, whom she pities. However, her purchases today - painting utensils and crutches - will get her noticed.

After only eleven minutes, Turtle screams and runs out of the house. She has seen the corpse, but it's not like the stories. She finds him tucked into his bed. Very early the next day, Turtle sees in the newspaper that Sam Westing was found dead. The newspaper's obituary tells of Westing's love of games and chess and his elaborate Fourth of July firework displays. However, there was no explanation of how the body was found, nor of the envelope at the bedside with the message If I am found dead in bed, nor mention of any footprint tracks left by Doug or Turtle. At noon Otis Amber delivers sixteen letters from attorney E.J. Plum, naming the recipients as beneficiaries of Samuel W. Plum is in the library. While peeking into the open coffin, Turtle sees her mother's silver cross necklace in the hands of Sam Westing. Doctor Denton Deere, Angela's fiancé, also shows up for the reading of the will.

Sixteen people in all arrive for the reading of the Westing estate: The Wexler family, except for father Jake; Chris and Theo—but not their parents; Doug and Mr. Hoo—but not his wife; Judge J.J. He then reads the will, which is broken down into numbered sections, such as FIRST and SECOND. When the will states that Westing has gathered his sixteen nieces and nephews, Grace Wexler yells in surprise - and, as written in the will, is told to sit down. Westing also writes in his will that he did not die of natural causes, but his life was taken by one of the sixteen.

During the reading of the will, Sandy McSouthers shouts out a joke, which amuses some and angers others—while talking over the lawyer in the meantime. The will then mentions the heirs will play the Westing Game, but before they begin, a moment of silence is given for the deceased.

Chapter Summary

In the game room, eight card tables are set up. Theo finds someone has started a chess game and plays along. Plum continues the reading of the will with the rules of the Westing Game: sixteen players will be teamed up in pairs. Each pair receives $10,000 and a set of clues. The pairs are announced: Madame Sun Lin Hoo and Jake Wexler, who are not present; Turtle Wexler and Flora Baumbach; Chris Theodorakis and Denton Deere; Sandy McSouthers with J.J. Ford; Grace Windsor Wexler and James Shin Hoo; Berthe Erica Crow and Otis Amber; Theo Theodorakis and Doug Hoo; and Sydelle Pulaski and Angela Wexler.

Once paired, everyone looks at their clues except Angela and Sydelle, who listen for the others' clues. Judge Ford is offended by her clues and tells Sandy that she's leaving the game, but Sandy begs her to stay for financial reasons; if she quits, they both forfeit the $10,000. Turtle and Flora swallow their clues after memorizing them. The lawyer says that no copies of the will can be made, but the heirs realize they do have a copy: the notes Sydelle Pulaski took.

CHAPTER 8: The Paired Heirs

Chapter Summary

The snowfall from last night has become a blizzard, trapping all of the tenants in Sunset Towers or at their respective places of work. The tenants of Sunset Towers are stuck in the building with no telephone or electricity. In the blizzard, most of the partners are working on their clues. Sydelle and Angela have been invited to visit seven tenants, all wanting to see her copy of the will. Although she isn't invited, Sydelle visits Chris Theodorakis and is condescending to him, which makes Angela uncomfortable. Chris knows that Sydelle is faking her limp, so he's not afraid to ask her for help with his clues: FOR PLAIN GRAIN SHED. After a discussion about grains, Chris believes he's found the killers: Otis Amber and Judge Ford.

Turtle believes the clues she and her partner were given were meant for the stock market. Turtle and Flora use their clues as stock market investments. She puts together a list of stocks to invest and includes Westing Paper Products, as per the closing line of the will. Mr. Hoo and Grace look over their clues (FRUITED PURPLE WAVES FOR SEA) but get lost trying to interpret them as well. Doug is putting his half of the check into his savings account; Theo's half goes to his parents. The clues they have are HIS N ON TO THEE FOR, which are confusing. Theo predicts that everyone's clues will add up to one message for everyone. Theo mentions that he was playing chess with someone in the game room but has no idea with whom.

Judge Ford is insulted by the clues she received: SKIES AM SHINING BROTHER. Looking over her clues and the certificate of sanity the lawyer gave her, she recognizes the name Sidney Sikes, MD. The newspaper obituary had said he was a friend of Westing and they were both involved in a near-fatal automobile accident. Judge Ford thinks that Sam Westing is using this game to punish one of these "heirs." She wonders how everyone is connected beyond Sunset Towers and realizes that is a good starting point. With the telephones working again, she calls up Barney Northrup and the newspaper and asks for information about every one of the heirs. Angela sneaks into Turtle's room and finds their clues: GOOD GRACE FROM HOOD SPACIOUS. Because Angela and Sydelle listened during the original clue reveal, they overheard several others; they lay everyone's clues out: KING QUEEN PURPLE WAVES ON (NO) GRAINS MOUNTAIN (EMPTY). By the end, they discover someone had stolen Sydelle's notebook.

CHAPTER 9: Lost and Found

Chapter Summary

The next morning, the residents begin a bulletin board, posting index cards with notes asking for lost items, advertisements for local restaurants, and jokes played on each other. The two main notes are for the return of Sydelle's notebook—which contains the notes from the will—and an invitation to an informal party at Judge Ford's apartment at eight o'clock that evening. Grace Wexler feigns caring for her younger daughter by fixing her hair and giving her compliments, but it's all an act to coerce Turtle into revealing her clues. The newspaper returns Judge Ford's earlier call to let her know about newspaper clippings that mention the other heirs. She finds out over the phone that Mr. Hoo had claimed that Westing stole his idea for the disposable paper diaper. There's also a stack of clippings on Doug Hoo's high-school sports accomplishments and a good deal of Westing clippings still unread. Ford hangs up, as the party begins.

CHAPTER 10: The Long Party

Chapter Summary

Grace and Jake Wexler are the first to arrive, not wanting to be fashionably late. The party goes on and on, as no one wants to leave and possibly miss a clue. Angela is upset for two reasons: everyone mentions Denton when speaking to her and Grace scolded her in front of everyone for dressing up in a "twin" costume with Sydelle. Jake then attempts a conversation with Madame Hoo, who doesn't speak English. Sydelle, convinced that the murderer is a twin, tries to start conversations about twins with everyone, to no avail.

Judge Ford studies the only pair in Sunset Towers who are not heirs, George and Catherine Theodorakis—Chris and Theo's parents. Chris continues to watch legs for a limp. There's a long line at the bar as Theo tries to explain chess to Sydelle. Unable to hide her disgust with her mother's comments, Angela rushes into the kitchen to be alone; she is surprised when she finds Crow there, who provides little comfort. CHAPTER 11: The Meeting

The guests are hesitant about attending today's meeting, of whether or not to share their clues with the other heirs. Turtle asks Flora to braid her hair; they begin talking of Flora's dead daughter Rosalie and Turtle complains that her mother doesn't think she's beautiful. Flora finds out Turtle's real name is Alice. There's a new message on the bulletin board offering a reward by Judge Ford for the return of a gold railroad watch inscribed to her father. Chris makes a realization that the Judge's name and apartment are the same: Ford, 4D.

Theo, who runs the meeting, has called everyone together to see if pooling all clues together could help them all make sense of the will, splitting the inheritance. Sydelle says she should get a larger share because of her notes, which provokes Mr. Hoo to slam the shorthand notebook on the counter. Sydelle grabs the book and calls Hoo a thief, but he says he found it on a table in his restaurant this morning; Grace Wexler adds that she looked at the book, but it didn't translate into words. Sydelle then reveals that she wrote the shorthand in Polish.

Saying she has questions, Judge Ford suggests that people write anonymous questions on paper and read them aloud. The first question is if anybody is a twin, which no one answers; the second is about Turtle's real name, which Grace Wexler says is "Tabitha-Ruth" and Flora Baumbach says is "Alice" simultaneously. The third question asks who has actually met Sam Westing and only Mr. Hoo raises his hand; Judge Ford has also met Sam Westing in person but does not raise her hand since it's her own question. The last question—who was kicked last week—goes unanswered as panic ensues!

CHAPTER 12: The First Bomb

Chapter Summary

Loud bangs fiercely interrupt the meeting. Mrs. Theodorakis runs out of the kitchen, covered in “blood” (actually tomato sauce). Everyone but Sydelle goes into the kitchen, which is covered in tomato sauce and fire extinguisher foam. Hoo thinks the cans of tomato sauce exploded from stove heat, but George Theodorakis insists it was a bomb. Catherine Theodorakis says there's no real damage, but they'll need several days to clean up, at which Mr. Hoo smiles. Later, Sydelle and Angela begin transcribing the will's notes back into English. Turtle knocks on the door demanding the return of the newspaper Angela stole, reminding her that her engagement ring is on the sink again and to be wary of thieves. Sydelle and Turtle get into an argument in which harsh words are exchanged and truths are unearthed, including Turtle's big mouth, Angela's unhappy engagement, and Sydelle's crutch.

The newspaperman calls Judge Ford with another article with a Westing heir: George Theodorakis—Chris and Theo's dad. There's no article, only a photo, of George as Violet Westing's date twenty years ago. She now knows of four heirs with Westing connections: James Hoo, Theo's father, Sandy McSouthers, and herself. Chapter Summary

Another bomb has been planted in Shin Hoo's Chinese Restaurant, planning to detonate at 6:30. Everyone but Mr. and Mrs. Theodorakis come down to the restaurant; they order up, staying in their rooms. Grace Wexler plays hostess and seats people based on her own pairings, separating the couples at the door. Sydelle and Chris, the cripples, enjoy a light-hearted meal; Angela and Theo struggle to make conversation with each other; Judge Ford and Mrs. Baumbach discuss Flora's past making wedding gowns, including Mr. Westing's daughter—Violet's—wedding gown; Turtle sits with her father Jake and listens to the stock market through her radio earpiece while her father rambles to himself. Mr. Hoo quietly asks Jake Wexler about the upcoming Packers game to which Turtle announces she knows her father is a bookie.

The bomb in Hoo's Restaurant goes off just as Otis Amber enters. Sydelle Pulaski had gone to give her "compliments to the chef" when the bomb exploded, spraining her ankle. With the sprinkler system going, they call an ambulance and Sydelle is brought to the hospital, Angela by her side. The fire department assure the tenants that both bombs were just gas fires, so Grace Wexler takes extra precautions against an explosion at Angela's bridal shower—but that's exactly where the next bomb is going to explode.

CHAPTER 14: Pairs Repaired

Chapter Summary

The snowplows free the trapped heirs from Sunset Towers. Angela is the first one out, checking under the hoods of all the cars in the parking lot from a hunch off their clues. Flora Baumbach and Turtle are next out, checking on their stocks. Turtle keeps to herself their large loss. Sandy McSouthers and Judge Ford talk about Sandy's family and financial troubles. He also shows the judge progress he's made on the clues: SKIES -- Dr. Sikes, AM BrothER -- Otis Amber; SHINing -- James Shin Hoo or Turtle kicks shins; and BROTHER -- Theo or Chris. Judge Ford mentions Theo's proposal to pool clues together but Sandy refuses because it seems too easy.

Returning to her apartment, Grace Wexler hears Otis Amber arguing with Crow about losing their clues. Even though they both have memorized the clues, Otis thinks another pair will discover them. As a joke about the looming gas explosions, Otis suddenly yells "Boom!" which surprises both women; he continues to yell "Boom!" on unsuspecting people for the rest of the week as he delivers groceries for everyone. Denton Deere and Chris Theodorakis meet again to discuss clues, much to the delight of Chris and annoyance of Denton. He knows Denton will keep returning as long as he doesn't sign his half of the check. In passing, Theo lets Angela know that the quote "May God thy gold refine" is not from the Bible or Shakespeare, but rather the third stanza of "America, the Beautiful." Angela then goes to visit Sydelle, who is still in the hospital. She briefly discusses with the psychiatrist that Sydelle made up her "disease" to get attention but isn't crazy, but when talking with Sydelle, Angela doesn't lead on that she knows the disease is not real. She tells her partner that her crippling disease is incurable but could have a remission of five years or more. When handing Sydelle's makeup bag to her, Angela discovers a letter asking for forgiveness and two clues taped to the bottom: THY BEAUTIFUL.

CHAPTER 15: Fact and Gossip

Chapter Summary

After the snow has cleared, everything goes back to life as normal: Turtle, Doug, and Theo go back to school; Judge Ford back to the court; and Mr. Hoo back to his restaurant. The five people who made the bet on Halloween - Sandy McSouthers, Otis Amber, Theo Theodorakis, Doug Hoo, and Turtle Wexler - discuss that night. They discuss possible ways Westing could have been killed, ending with Sandy telling Turtle a story of a soothsayer who predicted the day of his own death. Jake Wexler enjoys dinner at the Shin Hoo restaurant and tries to make conversation with his wife. He asks about the presents in their apartment, and she reminds him they are for Angela's wedding shower the next day. Mrs. Wexler also discusses a new advertising campaign for the Chinese restaurant.

Judge Ford and Sandy McSouthers, partners in the Westing Game, want to interrogate George Theodorakis and James Hoo. They order food from their restaurants but are disappointed when Theo delivers the meals. Going over clippings from the newspaperman, Judge Ford and Sandy review information on the Westing family. There is very little information on Mrs. Westing, no first name or maiden name. The final picture is of her in a black veil leaving a cemetery from her daughter's death. Neither Jimmy Hoo nor Flora Baumbach ever met Mrs. Westing. Sandy saw Mrs. Westing once or twice but remembers someone very different than Judge Ford's memory of Mrs. Westing. Violet Westing, his daughter, was supposed to marry a senator but local gossip said that she really wanted to marry George Theodorakis, Theo's dad. As Flora claims, Violet does look very similar to Angela Wexler, and George Theodorakis was the man dancing with her in the society page clippings. According to gossip at the time, Violet killed herself rather than marry a crooked politician. Judge Ford asks if Angela and Theo are involved romantically and Sandy hopes not: if Sam Westing wants to reenact that history, Angela Wexler would have to die.

CHAPTER 16: The Third Bomb

Chapter Summary

In the Wexler apartment Grace, Angela, Turtle, and several people Grace thought to invite are celebrating Angela's bridal shower. She begins by opening gifts, and opens a particular gift very slowly. Impatiently, Turtle runs over to see what is inside; Angela jerks the gift away from her sister as fireworks fly out of the box. After the explosion, Angela has burns on her hands and a bloody gash across her cheek. After the police are called, the heirs begin to show their paranoid fear, silently accusing everyone else of the bombings. The captain says the bombs were just fireworks triggered by a striped candle in an open jar and that Angela wouldn't have hurt herself if she hadn't tilted the box towards her face.

Angela is taken to the hospital and placed in the same room as Sydelle Pulaski. Turtle thanks her sister for keeping the box from going off in her own face and has brought Angela's tapestry bag to the hospital, removing the "incriminating evidence." Turtle reminds Angela that being pretty isn't the most important thing but adds that the bomb was a dumb thing for Angela to do. Sydelle, who was pretending to be asleep, realizes Angela was the bomber—and is proud of her for it.

Jake Wexler offers to help his wife and Mr. Hoo with their clues, with the promise of giving up any inheritance if they win. Bouncing their ideas off of a new person, Grace and James Hoo have determined that the murderer is Ed Plum (PURPLE FRUIT/ED), the lawyer. Sandy and Judge Ford discuss the clues they have collected over dinner. They review their clues, mentioning that Mr. Hoo's connection to Mr. Westing has motive: Mr. Hoo thinks Sam Westing stole his idea for the disposable diaper. After Theo's discovery of a formula that spelled explosives and Otis' name, he runs to tell Doug even though it's the middle of the night. CHAPTER 18: The Trackers

Turtle and Flora Baumbach—now called Baba after the bomb scare—continue growing closer with Mrs. Baumbach braiding Turtle’s hair and being in charge of watching the stock market, which increased greatly while Turtle was in school. We also learn from Sandy McSouthers’ notebook that Mrs. Baumbach ran a bridal shop with her husband before he left; had a mentally retarded daughter Rosalie, who died at age 19; and made the wedding gown for Violet Westing, though the bride died before her wedding. Also from his notebook, we are reminded of other Westing connections: Otis Amber delivered the letters from Plum, the lawyer; Denton Deere is engaged to Angela Wexler who looks like Violet Westing; and Sydelle Pulaski has no known Westing connection. Theo told Doug about his chemical discovery and tells him to follow Otis Amber, who makes several stops but nothing too suspicious. After a long day at the hospital, Denton Deere goes to visit his partner Chris and tells him to pack his things—he’s got an overnight at the hospital planned for some new experimental medicine.

Chapter Summary

Although Crow doesn't want to return to the Westing Household, Otis says she needs to return to collect her due. Otis also thinks he's discovered the bomber—James Hoo—which inspires Crow to take revenge for scarring her beautiful angel's (Angela's) face. Sandy McSouthers discusses Crow's past but is unaware of a Westing connection. Crow visits James Hoo, who she believes to be the bomber, but leaves knowing that such a charitable man (he gave her insoles for her feet) could not be the bomber. Angela and Sydelle in the hospital receive another group of clues from Chris—WITH MAJESTIES. Another look in the notebook tells us Grace Wexler's maiden name is Windkloppel, the same as Crow's ex-husband. She isn't related to Sam Westing as she claimed; she is related to the cleaning woman! Theo wasn't able to meet up with Doug right away because of an accident; the lab he was working in exploded due to his own miscalculation of the chemical formula. Judge Ford finally gets the meeting she wanted with George Theodorakis, who tells the judge that Violet's mother broke up their relationship, not Sam Westing. Chapter Summary

Theo borrows Turtle's bike to continue following Otis Amber, whom they believe is the murderer. Theo discovers that these two—Otis and Crow—whom he thought were connected to the murder of Sam Westing are actually good people who volunteer at a soup kitchen, and it makes him feel dishonest for spying. Judge Ford and Sandy McSouthers finish discussing the information they have about the heirs with themselves, where Judge Ford reveals that she lived in the Westing House as a child but didn't have much contact with the family. She also says that he paid for her college degree and has yet to repay the debt.

The fourth bomb is placed in the elevator and explodes when Theo opens the door. Turtle also comes in contact with the explosion, which singes five inches off of her long braid. Instead of filling out the paperwork, the bomb squad releases Turtle to the custody of Judge Ford. The Judge talks with Turtle and realizes she is covering for Angela and that she was in the Westing House the night of the murder. Jake and Grace Wexler talk on the way to the track meet, Grace being negative and critical of Jake the entire time. Even though it concerns both of their daughters, Grace cries out her worries and returns to her apartment. Chris is dropped off to Judge Ford's apartment because Denton has to go back to the hospital. They have a short chat and return to their independent work. Sandy McSouthers enters Judge Ford's apartment, dejected. Barney Northup has apparently fired Sandy McSouthers for no reason. Each pair is given another check for $10,000 and asked to give their answers to the will's puzzle. Partners reveal their answers, each one very different from the next. Written in the will—as silly as before—Mr. Westing gives specific instructions, sending Crow to the kitchen for refreshments; she returns unharmed, after filling Sandy McSouthers flask for him. As written in the will, Mr. Plum announces that all answers given so far are wrong and all partnerships are cancelled. From there, Mr. Plum walked out of the room and locked the door. After some paranoid thoughts and accusations, the heirs decide to work together and split the inheritance. Sydelle is pretty sure it has to do with “America, the Beautiful” and they begin writing the lyrics out. When Sandy suggests that everyone turn in their clues to be looked at, Judge Ford realizes that her partner is playing into Sam Westing’s hands—because he is Sam Westing! After arranging the clues, the heirs discover that the missing words spell Berthe Erica Crow. Immediately, Judge Ford leaps to Crow’s behalf and defends her innocence, but during her speech, Sandy McSouthers appears to have an attack and dies on the floor. Another document is read from Westing’s will that states if no one can come up with the answer in five minutes, the will is null and void. In the last minute, Crow herself stands up and declares herself the answer, and therefore winner. She gives half of her inheritance to the soup kitchen and the other half to Angela.

Turtle takes Angela's copy of the will and reviews it carefully, noticing small clues she had not previously noticed. Chapter Summary

Acting as a lawyer, Turtle asks pointed questions at each of her fellow heirs in an attempt to prove Crow's innocence. Through Turtle's interrogations, we find that Otis Amber, the idiot deliveryman, was actually the private investigator who helped not only Judge Ford but Samuel Westing and Barney Northrup as well. He tells that he made a mistake with Sydelle Pulaski, inviting her instead of Crow's childhood friend Sybil. Denton Deere is called next, who claims he did not examine the bodies closely enough to tell how they died, let alone if Westing's corpse was even a real body. Sydelle Pulaski is asked to testify after Denton and is asked about her one "mistake," the one word missing from her transcription of the will. Judge Ford also receives a personal note, claiming her financial debt has been repaid in full. Madame Hoo makes a confession, handing over all the stolen goods she was planning on selling in order to return to China. Once back to the case, Turtle presents a convincing argument that Sandy McSouthers was actually Sam Westing. Reviewing the will yet another time, Turtle discovers that Sydelle did not in fact make a mistake in copying the will; the will was written to throw off the heirs: "The heir who wins the windfall will be the one who finds the... FOURTH." As Turtle is stalling for time to think of what to say next, the lawyer reenters into the library walking with Crow.

Chapter Summary

Crow and E.J. Plum reenter the library, announcing Crow's innocence and Plum's resignation from any Westing affairs. Reading the last section of the will, the heirs are disappointed to find that—even though they are all splitting the property and possessions of Sunset Towers—there is no mention of the two hundred million dollar estate; they had lost the Westing Game. Turtle is up to something, however, and is waiting patiently for Mr. Westing's final move. Suddenly, the Westing House erupts in fireworks and explosions. "Happy Fourth of July!" yells Turtle. After the twenty-minute show, the entire Westing House had burned down. Once the smoke has cleared, Turtle rides her bike to collect her prize; she has solved the puzzle. Sam Westing had four identities, and the winner was who finds the "fourth" identity. As Sam Westing, Barney Northrup, and Sandy Mc*Southers* (west, north, south), Windy Windkloppel had yet another identity. Activities to Support Standards Standards Labeled [R08-S1C6-01] Predict text content using prior knowledge and text features (e.g., illustrations, titles, topic sentences, key words).

Students will use elements of the text to predict what will occur in each chapter. Every few chapters, the students will also participate in a mystery game that requires them to form a group and make a prediction as to who the killer is based on the clues stated so far in the text.

Students complete a SQUEEPERS (SQP2RS) worksheet, creating questions and later answering them.

[R08-S1C6-02] Confirm predictions about text for accuracy.

Students will record their findings in the text chronologically, in response to their questions and predictions made prior to each chapter.

[R08-S1C6-04] Use graphic organizers in order to clarify the meaning of the text.

Students will complete a graphic organizer that accurately displays the beginning, middle, and end of each chapter read.

[R08-S1C6-05] Connect information and events in text to experience and to related text and sources.

Student will write a three-paragraph piece on their connection to one of the characters or events in the story. Students will later revisit this character or event to modify their response after the story has ended.

[R08-S1C6-06] Apply knowledge of the organizational structures (e.g., chronological order, compare and contrast, cause and effect relationships, logical order, by classification) of text to aid comprehension.

Students will be given the opportunity to identify various organizational structures within the story by reading the text in each chapter and providing at least one specific example of an organizational structure within that chapter.

[R08-S1C6-07] Use reading strategies (e.g., drawing conclusions, determining cause and effect relationships, making inferences, sequencing) to comprehend text

 Students will form groups to arrange events from the story (written on note cards) in order.

[R08-S2C1-01] Analyze plot development (e.g., conflict, subplots, parallel episodes) to determine how conflicts are resolved.

Students will be part of an interactive game that requires one student to begin by filling in the part of the story depicted by the teacher (teacher will request the student to write about the exposition, or the falling action). The next student to write will be asked to fill a different part of the story. The end of the activity will have completed the entire plot line. This is a type of informal assessment for each group of students. Each student will also be asked to independently identify elements such as: conflicts, subplots, and parallel episodes within the story.

[R08-S2C1-03] Describe a character based upon the thoughts, words, and actions of the character, the narrator's description, and other characters.

Students will use a chart (graphic organizer) to analyze specific characters from the story. Within this chart, the students will state the character's name, personality traits according to the reader and the author, position within the story, and relation to other characters.

[R08-S2C1-04] Contrast points of view (e.g., first, third, limited, omniscient) in literary text.

Students will be given excerpts from the text in a group and asked to label and discuss the different points of view within the piece of text. Then, the teacher will display his/her own excerpt on the overhead with examples underlined. The students will individually identify and write down the type of point of views underlined on the overhead.

[R08-S2C1-05] Analyze the relevance of the setting (e.g., time, place, situation) to the mood and tone of the text.

Student will draw excerpts from a hat. Each excerpt will contain an underlined word or sentence that clearly depicts setting and mood in the text.
